We, the staff of the Virginian, convey our greetings and best wishes to you. May this volume embody our love for our Alma Mater. May it set forth in concrete form her spirit of service, loyalty, and democracy, her standards of honor and learning. May it, in future years, remind each of you who have had instilled in you her spirit and her standards, of those days spent within her walls. May it bring back to you the best that you have received.

DEDICATION

IN grateful appreciation of her never failing aid, sympathy and ready co-operation and in loving recognition of her loyal and affectionate services to our Alma Mater we dedicate this volume of

The Virginian

TO

Miss Jennie Masters Tabb

To

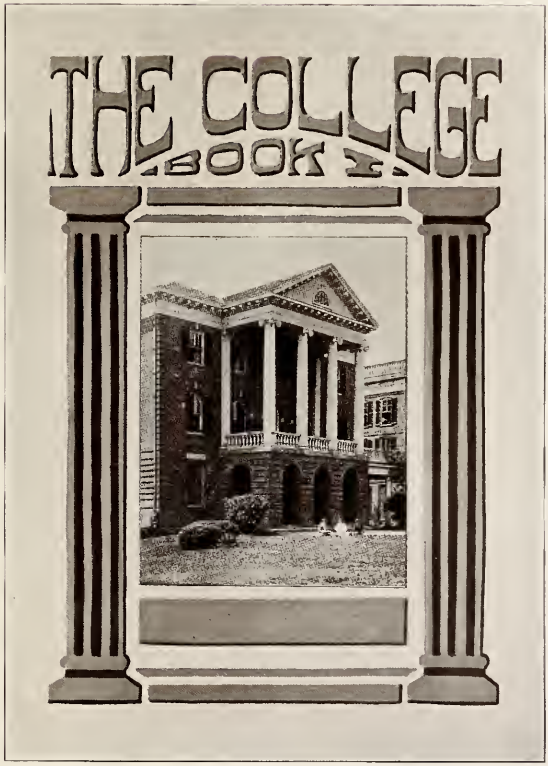
Woodrow Wilson

We called you Dreamer, said your dreams were vain—
We who today kneel humbly by the Gate
Through which you lately passed, and pledge, too late,
The faith you gave your life and soul to gain.

We called you Dreamer; to-day we know regret;
The aching bitterness of debts delayed
By littleness and blindness, ere we paid;
The tragedy of vain remorse—and yet

Surely, beneath your Sleep, you know that God
Will bring the harvest after sun and rain;
Our stumbling feet shall find the path you trod—
We'll keep the faith . . . you have not dreamed in vain.

—Pauline Timberlake



THE COLLEGE
BOOK

To Alma Mater

All hail, Alma Mater! Dear Mother to thee,
Thy daughters true, faithful and loyal will be;
Thy gentle instruction, thy influence so sweet,
Will go with them always—a guide to their feet.
Thy loving protection, thy nurturing care,
Would lead them to cherish things lovely and fair.
All hail, Alma Mater! Dear Mother to thee,
Thy daughters true, faithful and loyal will be.

Thy halls and arcades with their calm, classic air,
Thy campus with blossom perennially fair,
Thy trees and thy fountain, thy vine-covered walls
Will live in their memory, whatever befalls.
Though far from thy care and protection they roam,
They still hold thee dear, as a well beloved home.
All hail, Alma Mater! Dear Mother, to thee
Thy daughters true, faithful and loyal will be.

—Jennie Masters Tabb.

"The Long Roll"

In the good old Farmville Normal
There's a roll that's mighty long—
The Freshmen, Sophs, the Juniors, and the Seniors.
It's a noble aggregation,
And it's nigh a thousand strong—
The Freshmen, Sophs, the Juniors, and the Seniors.

You will note sophistication
In the Freshmen's lofty air—
Not the Sophomores', the Juniors', or the Seniors',
You may think it's not respectful,
But pray, what do Freshmen care
For the Sophomores, the Juniors, or the Seniors?

You will sense supernal Wisdom
In the second classmen's mien—
Not the Freshmens', or the Juniors', or the Seniors'—
And you'll wonder where they got it
For it hasn't yet been seen
On the Freshmen, or the Juniors, or the Seniors.

You observe the great decorum
Which denotes the Junior Class—
Not the Freshmen, not the Sophomores, or Seniors—
And you wonder what disasters
Could have brought that state to pass
In the Juniors—not the Freshmen, Sophs, or Seniors.

But behold the careless manner
(And I have not said the half)
Of the Seniors! Not the Freshmen, Sophs, or Juniors.
They may give themselves the ha-ha,
But they will not stand the gaff
From the Freshmen, from the Sophomores, or Juniors.

—Lalla Jones.

Resolved: To Evolute

Far, far away in the Forest of Wisdom lived a happy tribe of monkeys. In this forest grew trees of knowledge spreading forth branches of wisdom. Jumping from branch to branch the tribe acquired education and experience. Now these monkeys had heard a great deal of Evolution, and of the important part they played in this controversy. They had become quite convinced that without them, there would be no Evolution. With this in mind, they decided to apply the principle in their forest and evolved this rule: all monkeys entering the Forest of Wisdom shall begin at the east end and travel west, evoluting from one limb to another.

The trees at the east end were very large, with strong branches, for they must support many monkeys. As one went farther west, the trees became more slender and beautiful. Midway the forest there was a decided break between the trees, a long distance, quite hard to jump. This gave the monkeys much trouble. An infallible rule of the forest stated that he who decended to the grounds must begin anew—so jump they must. The trees on the east were covered with beautiful foliage and were exceedingly attractive, but those on the west boasted foliage and flowers too. To some clung grape vines weighted with fruit. Oh, visions delightful to the anthropoid heart! Nevertheless many feared to leap, and so the greater number climbed down and went in to the forest, some to become nonentities, some to establish family trees of their own, and some to improve the world. Those who attempted to jump were very successful (for the God of Wisdom watches over the brave and insured them safe landing) and enjoyed greatly the fruit and flowers of the lovely trees.

Among the tribe was a happy band, who had passed through the first half of the forest, leaped successfully the wide space, and were in the trees at the west end. Their leader, having called the band together, said, "Fellow monkeys, soon we shall have traversed the entire Forest of Wisdom and shall be ready to face the wide world. What shall we do when we leave this place?" Then the smallest monkey rose and with many gesticulations, earnestly answered, "I think we should do something worthwhile. It would be wrong for us who have had great advantages and superior training not to do something great for the world." Next spoke a serious slow speaking monkey, who had spent much time on the branches of science, "As you all know there must be Evolution. The world can't go on unless people evolute. People can't evolute unless monkeys do—therefore let us evolute." Said another, the prettiest, "That sounds very well. But the world is mighty big and I don't see how a few monkeys like us can keep the whole race evoluting." Then the wisest of the tribe: "Tut-Tut!" It is not so difficult as it seems. We can go forth into the world and prepare little monkeys to enter the Forest of Wisdom. And thus Evolution will proceed—"Hurrah for monkeys!" shouted one. "Hurrah for Evolution!" cried another. "Hurrah for the Forest of Wisdom!" said the leader.

And then they evoluted!

Showers

Across the desert stretches
    Across the blistered sands,
In the distance there approaches
    A traveller from other lands.
One cloud, deserted, lonely,
    Cast from its pilgrim host
Of storm clouds, still on their journey,
    Lingers—sad and lost.

But it gives itself in raindrops
    And a tiny stream there flows
To lose itself in the sand dune—
    The sand dune on which it rose.
In the West another shower
    Falls to cool the earth—
The raindrops still seek service—
    Each ending is but a birth.

—Olive Smith.

Art and the Dishrag

"All things are beautiful
Because of something lovelier than themselves
Which breathes within them, and will never die."
—Lucy Larcom.

Joyce Chandler leaned back in the wicker porch chair, her very soul drinking in the peace and beauty of the twilight. She was tired, and it was good to sit still and simply dream. The most worldly person would have banished his objections to dreamers when he looked at Joyce. Lying back in the chair, she seemed to embody the July twilight. Her vividly blue eyes held that intangible expression which intimated an enjoyment of things too fine for an ordinary mortal to appreciate. The sensitive mouth, the delicate complexion, the grace and poise of the slight form, the soft golden hair, bobbed short, all contributed to make her appearance refined and cultured. A beauty-loving soul, sensitive to the coarse, sordid and ugly, had limned her features with delicacy.

The sudden approach of a gentleman brought Joyce back to earth with a jerk. She rose quickly and awaited the arrival at the porch of an elderly gentleman who was coming up the walk.

"Good evening, Miss Joyce." Dr Carter's voice was in keeping with his quiet, distinguished appearance. His kind gray eyes, white hair and sympathetic smile bespoke one who understood mankind. His business-like air and firm, patient mouth proclaimed the physician. "May it never be said," he continued, "that I interrupted the dreams of youth—and beauty." He bowed chivalrously.

Joyce laughed, her eyes sparkling. Her cordial hand went out to meet the doctor's.

"How did you reach your age without some wily woman claiming you, you dear old flatterer?" she inquired. "Yes, I was dreaming. I am glad you interrupted, however, for my dream was making me blue and dissatisfied." A tiny frown disturbed the smoothness of her brow.

"I know," sympathized the physician. "Your art. You were dreaming of that. Don't give up those dreams, child. What was it this time?"

Dr. Carter, now seated in the wicker rocker, looked up at the graceful young figure leaning against a pillar, one hand resting among the leaves of a moon-flower vine. Her artistic nature betrayed itself even in her posture. He could detect, through the deepening dusk, the flush which mantled the youthful cheek.

"Oh, Dr. Carter, you cannot know how I feel at times. How unfair life seems! I heard from my best friend, Catherine, today. She is studying art in New York. We were to study there together but Mother was taken ill." Joyce's voice was a trifle unsteady. "She says I am losing interest in art, becoming too domestic. Oh, how I long to be with her, to come in contact with people who breathe, think, talk, live, and love art as I do! Art —Oh, how I want it! But you must think me selfish. My dreams are all of art. Visions of myself studying, creating, triumphing, will come before me. Here everything is so out of harmony, so inartistic."

A sweep of her hand indicated the house which was built, not to beautify the world, but to rent. The severe front door boasted a window, resplendent with a crocheted curtain, designed in cocoanut palms inhabited by over-grown monkeys. Beyond was a red carpeted hall, doing its blatant best to rival the brilliant green of the wall paper. Under Joyce's scathing glance, the red and green would have paled and the monkeys taken refuge in the palms, but they seemed brazen in their uncompromising ugliness.

Dr. Carter had risen to his feet, looking into the girl's eyes. "Yes, you long to live where there is art. It is in your power. It is here. Enjoy it."

Joyce looked at him unbelievingly. "What do you mean? I can't go away—with Mother ill. I have no time for art—even to tint photographs. I—"

"You don't understand," he interrupted. "Art is here. A soul loving beauty can find it anywhere. Open the eyes of your beauty-loving soul and look into your home. What is art?"

"The incarnation of an idea," said Joyce glibly.

"Does not the incarnation of a beautiful idea mean the birth of beauty and art? But I must go in to see your Mother. I hope she is comfortable."

Joyce thought of his words as she lay in bed that night. "Open the eyes of your beauty-loving soul and look into your home." Was she blind to art? Of course nature—she had always loved that, but Dr. Carter said art was here in her home. Crocheted palm trees, sheltering monkeys! Red carpet, Green wall paper! Then Joyce smiled with the birth of a new idea and dropped into peaceful slumber.

She awoke resolved to paint beautiful things into her life. "I'll paint my face, first—with a smile," she promised herself, and the blue eyes lit up and the corners of the sensitive mouth curved. "Hello, Mother, dear," she trilled, entering her room. "Isn't it a lovely day?"

The little woman in the bed smiled sadly, knowing that her daughter was regretting her inability to study her beloved art. How her illness had eaten into the bank account which was to finance the trip to New York to study! It would be long before Joyce could go to school. But Joyce's bright smile and her statement that she intended to look for art at home lightened the mother's heart. Mrs. Chandler felt much better and enjoyed the breakfast which Joyce soon brought on a tray which she had "painted" with a clean doilie, the best china and a dewy rose.

Joyce confronted the kitchen sink. Dirty dishes! How she loathed them! She looked at them distastefully while the water cooled and the drab dishrag hung meekly from her hand. Her father entered the room, kissed her, and placed a package in her hand. She turned back to the sink. It would have taken a futuristic artist to have found beauty there. Then she remembered the package. Tearing away the wrapping, she disclosed a framed motto with this inscription:

"'Tis not in the high stars above,
Nor in the cup of budding flowers,
Nor in the redbreast's mellow tone,
Nor in the bow that shines in showers,
But in the mud and scum of things,
There alway, alway, something sings."

Dr. Carter's card was enclosed and with it this instruction: Hang it over the sink. Joyce did so and then seized the dishrag. "My paint brush," she cried. She gazed at the sink with its collection of dirty china. "My canvas," she added. Then she swooped upon the dishes. The green carpet came in for its share next, the broom being her brush this time. Dr. Carter, coming in, was nearly choked by the rising dust.

"What offense has the poor carpet committed to be so cleaned?" he coughed.

"Cleaned! It's not being cleaned," she panted. "It's being painted."

The physician laughed and Joyce continued, "I'm learning more right here than I could in New York."

At twilight, a month later, Dr. Carter again found Joyce dreaming upon the veranda. Behind her was not a house but a home, a place of good taste and simple beauty, where green paper, red carpet, monkeys and cocoanut palms were banned.

"Little artist of the dishrag," began the Doctor, seating himself, "the time has come for me to give you a piece of good news. You remember your great aunt, Miss Laura Leftwich? No, don't curl your lip. She was a sour old maid but not as black as she is painted. While attending her shortly before her death, I grew quite friendly with her and was made executor of her will. Your grandmother, Ardelia, was of an artistic nature like you, my dear. She, too, wished to study art in New York but was forced to live with and cater to Miss Laura. Miss Laura was ill and very exacting. Poor Ardelia had no time for art. She did not learn the presence of art in a dishrag. After a while she married and let her aunt go. Before her death, Miss Laura declared that Ardelia should not receive a penny of her money. Instead, it was intrusted to me. For what purpose? Well, she was a strange woman, Miss Laura, hard to understand—but really good at heart. She told me to keep her money until I should find "an artist of the dishrag—a true artist," as she expressed it. It was to go to one who had proved herself a 'true artist' by finding art at home. You are that artist, my dear. Miss Laura's little fortune belongs to you."

Joyce was very quiet. It was becoming quite dark, but Dr. Carter could still see the far-away look in her blue eyes as she murmured, "But in the mud and scum of things, there always, always, something sings."

I.

The Northeaster

The wind sweeps clean on the beach to-night,
The waves are a fury of foam,
The ships scud by with their sails tucked close
Racing for harbor and home.

My little dog whines at the rain-drenched leaves,
As they flatten against the pane,
But the little cat blinks at the fire in content
And purrs in tune with the rain.

Ah, it's sheltered and safe by the hearth-side bright,
And it's there that I love to be,
But though my heart lives by the side of the fire,
My soul's on the wind-tossed sea!

II.

The Quest

Little white gull on the breast of the ocean
Drifting and sailing so light and so free,
Where would you lead me if I could but follow
Into the sunlight and over the sea?

White shining sails on the blue of the water
Heading your way toward lands I would know,
Where would you lead me, if I could follow
Over the waves in the lingering glow?

The little white sail drops its anchor at twilight,
The gull wings her way up the cliff to her nest—
There would they lead me—could I but follow--
Tho they seem wanderers, Home is their quest.

How the Fire Came to the Gym.

The first person I met at the Union Station the night after the fire, when the train had pulled in, was the Cub Reporter. Seizing me before I could escape, she prattled enthusiastically and continually in my ear, "Oh, do come right over here and tell me all about the fire so I can write it up for the Rotunda. Wasn't it perfectly awful? And weren't you just scared to death. And did you save anything at all?" With a despairing look around I reluctantly withdrew to a more nearly quiet corner of the Station where the rapture of offspring being firmly clutched to the family bosom once more was less furious, at the same time saying impressively, "Yes, yes, my child, all that you say is true, and much more besides. Listen to me while I tell you my tale. I have lived through many experiences too horible to recall, many hairbreadth mistakes have been my lot, but never, never have I lived through anything so terrifying, so heart-rending, so tremendous as the Farmville fire. If the awful experience has not turned my hair white, it has at least faded it to a mild pink." And I drew the Cub Reporter into a chair where she sat waiting for me to begin, hugging her note book and choking on sighs of anticipation. "As you know, my dear, I was in the gym,." we began after a pause. "Twenty of us lay there in peace and oblivion while the flames raged without. The first direct warning of the catastrophe I received was when a fireman placed his foot over my mouth in a frantic effort to direct the nozzle of the hose he was directing on the fiery furnace outside, at the same time hoarsely ordering me, "Dont scream, lady, it's all right." "Thoroughly reassured by his somewhat unnecessary order, but nevertheless desirous of more active service, I politely requested him to remove his foot. He apparently did not hear me. The next time I spoke, he fell, rather than jumped down and ran frantically from the room, pain written on every feature. Later I learned that my remarks had burned completely through the sole of the gentlemen's shoe and scorched his foot badly. In his haste, however, he accomplished more ill than good, for he slammed the door on the hose, cutting it in half. What, you thought the hose burst in the reception hall! Well, if that's the way you feel about it—", and I rose to go, only to be pulled back into my seat by a very apologetic Cub reporter who disclaimed all idea or thought of any kind, and apologized for fifteen minutes for having questioned my august word. Drawing myself together with an air of injured dignity, I continued, "The slamming of the door cut the hose in half." I looked sharply at the Cub reporter, but she sat with down-cast eyes in abject humility. "We were indeed in a precarious situation. The enormous pressure from without kept the door firmly closed while water poured in at a tremendous rate through key-hole and crack. As the water rose higher and higher, the look of hopeless terror on the faces of the victims was horrible.

A few clung dispiritedly to trunks which floated half-heartedly on the surface, but the majority had already abandoned the struggle. "Help, help, who will save me?" The despairing cry rang out again and again. At last I could stand it no longer; I must do something; I could not see human beings perish before my very eyes. I rose to the occasion, rose straight upward twenty feet, and clinging to a rafter where I could see the whole dreadful scene, called in my usual calm and collected voice, "I will save you. Let each Senior cast her cap on the water. A girl can cling to each corner until help arrives. Now which girl with an extra heavy line will volunteer to tow the victims to safety and the Norwegian ladders!" Several girls volunteered immediately and there the wretched clung until—", But I had caught the eye of a passing friend, and was signalling frantically. The girl answered my S. O. S., shouting while yet a great way off, "Why, hello, old top! Gee! I bet you are mad because you went home for the week-end and missed the fire." The remark seemed to daze the Cub reporter. An expression of doubt and incomprehension came and went in her eyes. "But I don't understand, I thought—", she burbled. She staggered under the blow but the opportunity was too great. Enthusiastically seizing the arm of my deliverer, I rushed away while the Cub reporter gently but firmly fainted in the arms of a red cap.

The Unusual Popular Song

I haven't a thing to be blue about,
There is no Mammy waiting for me;
I cannot play the banjo, and I really doubt
That the moon is shining down in Tennesee.

Cho—
I'm not going back
To any sort of shack,
I'm neither lonely nor blue;
And as for you darling,
I'm quite convinced
That there are ten million others like you.
